FINANCING YOUR MASTERS in FINANCE (MSF) ONLINE DEGREE

Graduate students in the Georgetown University Masters in Finance (MSF) Online Program may finance their education through a variety of sources such as, employee tuition benefits, veteran benefits, privately-sponsored grants and scholarships, and financial aid assistance coordinated through the Office of Student Financial Services (OSFS).

EMPLOYEE TUITION BENEFITS

Organizations may offer tuition payment benefits or employer-sponsored scholarships to their employees and/or the dependents of their employees. Students are encouraged to contact their personnel or human resources offices for further information about these funding opportunities for college expenses.

Georgetown offers tuition benefits to eligible university employees. Further information is available from the Georgetown University Office of Faculty and Staff Benefits.

VETERAN BENEFITS

Veterans are encouraged to visit the Georgetown University Veterans Office for information about educational benefits and support programs, including the Yellow Ribbon Program.

MSF SCHOLARSHIPS

Currently, there are no scholarships available for this degree. In the future, the MSF program may offer a limited number of scholarships to qualified MSF students after the admissions review process has concluded. Scholarship selection would be based on a candidate’s grades, test scores, professional experience, and overall strength of application. The program office will provide more information in the coming semesters.

PRIVATELY SPONSORED GRANTS AND SCHOLARSHIPS

Civic groups, churches, labor unions, and business organizations offer grant and scholarship awards based on financial need, academic merit and/or other criteria such as ethnic background, residency, or employment affiliation. In addition, there are various scholarship search services that offer free online searchable databases of private sector scholarships, fellowships, and grants. A few websites are listed below:
